against the indians in ohio waverly 1794 campaign major-general anthony william clark's journal of Wilson Clinic

In the middle of the clinic, a nurse was busy attending to a patient. The nurse was wearing a white lab coat and holding a clipboard. She was speaking to the patient, who was sitting in a chair. The patient appeared to be comfortable with the nurse, and the conversation was light-hearted. The nurse pointed to various parts of the clinic and explained their functions to the patient. The patient seemed to be listening intently, and the nurse occasionally checked the clipboard. The clinic was quiet, with no other patients or staff members visible in the immediate vicinity. The nurse occasionally looked around the clinic, checking on other patients and making sure everything was running smoothly. Overall, the atmosphere was calm and professional, with a focus on providing exceptional care to each and every patient.