C. Directed Individual Studies (Undergraduates)

Average of four students a semester Spring, 1993 – present

D. Courses taught

All, except 547 and 492, of these courses have been taught at least five times each at UNCW 1992 – Present

General Psychology (Psych 105); 100-level Introductory course in psychology with quizzes, several tests, a research requirement and a three-page paper from each student (Generally 65 students/class)

Drugs and Behavior (Psych 245); 200-level undergraduate course with numerous quizzes, five tests (including a comprehensive exam) and a three page paper from each student (Generally 65 students/class)

Psychopathology (Psych 347); Upper level undergraduate course requiring four tests (including a comprehensive final exam), several quizzes, a research paper and/or a class presentation from each student. (Generally about 25 – 30 students/class)

Chemical Dependency (Psych 445; 545); Crosslisted as a graduate and an advanced undergraduate seminar; required reading of average of three articles per week with a reaction paper from each student each week; Generally 6 - 8 graduate students, 5 undergraduates

Interventions Strategies in Alcohol and Drug Problems (Psych 551); required graduate level course with numerous assignments, papers and out of classroom experiences for about 7 graduate students per semester. I developed this course in 1996. It is the capstone course for the SATP master's concentration in Psychology.

Advanced Psychopathology (Psych 547); required graduate level course for SATP Graduate students, elective for General Concentration Graduate Students. Covers all of Abnormal Psychology including diagnosis with the DSM and introduction to Assessment. I developed and was the first to teach this course in 1994. Generally 8 – 10 Graduate students

Psychology Practicum: Providing weekly clinical supervision for two advanced level graduate students on clinical assignments in the SATP Concentration

Psychology Internship Supervision: provide clinical supervision one hour per week for one or two SATP graduate students completing their required six month internship (supervision is ongoing, regardless of when academic semesters begin and end, so it continues through the summer and semester breaks)

Research Seminar (Under various names), Psych 495: Research and supervision of work by undergraduate students including presentations and papers.

Theories of Counseling in Substance Abuse (Psych 492): upper level undergraduate course, which I developed and taught for the first time in Spring, 2000. Requires intensive class participation, an essay midterm and final, and a project for the class related to treatment of substance abuse

E. Innovative Teaching Experiences and Development

Developed a "Lunch with Teacher" program including all of my classes (Posted regular times when I would meet students for lunch at the Hawk's Nest and conduct informal office hours).

Developed a new undergraduate course, Theories of Counseling in Substance Abuse, Psych 492. My proposal was funded and the course was developed over the Summer of 1999, and taught for the first time to 18 undergraduate students in Spring, 2000 (see above)

Developed two new Graduate Courses for the Substance Abuse Treatment Concentration of the Psychology Graduate Program: Advanced Psychopathology (Psych 547) developed and taught first in Fall of 1994 (taught twice, now taught by others); and Interventions Strategies in Drug and Alcohol Problems (Psych 551) First developed and taught Spring, 1996. This is the capstone course for the SATP Concentration—have taught this course every Spring since 1996.

Responsible for writing and scoring the Substance Abuse section of the Master's level Comprehensive Examinations for SATP graduate students administered twice annually.

Participated as a Mentor in the UNCW Women in Leadership program 2003 – present.
